It was my first day in this beautiful city. When I was walking to the beach, a stranger came up to me and tried to shake my hands.

“Don't you remember me, my friend?” he said.

But I didn't know him at all. I was new to the city—I just arrived by plane and still had jetlag.

“I saw you at the airport. I work there at the customs. How are you enjoying our beautiful city?”

I couldn't remember him but I was too embarrassed to tell him. He was so friendly. He even wanted to take me to his uncle's seafood restaurant.

“You will love the seafood there,” he told me. “And it will be a dinner to remember.”

So we went to the restaurant and sat by the window. The dinner was really great, but the coffee tasted quite strange.

The next morning, I finally woke up and it was almost lunch time. And I was on the street. All my money was gone and my “friend” even took my watch and my shoes.
